January 2026

Field Trip

Tittesworth Reservoir - Tuesday 6th January

Tittesworth Reservoir - Paul Ashwin

Dammed in 1858 to harness the flow of the River Churnet, Tittesworth Reservoir was later enlarged in 1963 to become Staffordshire's second-largest waterbody. The site boasts two well-positioned bird hides and a network of thoughtfully maintained trails skirting the water's edge, offering excellent opportunities to enjoy both resident and passage birdlife.

Curlews in the Landscape

Andrew Brockbank

Friday 9th January

Andrew explores the curlew's decline and the challenges facing ground-nesting birds. He examines how farming changes, net-zero policies, grouse moors and recreation affect their future, highlighting practical actions for curlew recovery and the wider implications for nature's recovery across farmland, moorland and shoreline habitats.

Sandbach Flashes - 2nd December

18 members attended the Sandbach Flashes on a dry, sunny morning.

The water levels were high and the side lane was inaccessible.

46 bird species were recorded: Canada goose, greylag goose, Egyptian goose, shelduck, wigeon, mallard, teal, green-winged teal, pochard, tufted duck, woodpigeon, collared dove, moorhen, coot, little grebe, lapwing, curlew, black-tailed godwit, snipe, black-headed gull, common gull, lesser black-backed gull, cormorant, little egret, grey heron, buzzard, great spotted woodpecker, magpie, jackdaw, carrion crow, coal tit, blue tit, great tit, Cetti's warbler, long-tailed tit, wren, redwing, blackbird, robin, house sparrow, dunnoek, grey wagtail, pied wagtail, chaffinch, greenfinch, goldfinch

Middleton Lakes - 14th December

Attendees and weather

Seven members visited RSPB Middleton Lakes under light cloud in the morning, with sunny intervals developing later. Temperatures were around 10°C, making for comfortable walking conditions.

Start of the walk

From the car park we crossed the lane and joined the elevated boardwalk. Although the pool by the reedbed was quiet, the feeders were busy, attracting numerous blue tits and great tits, along with single chaffinch, goldfinch and greenfinch.

Through the woodland

As we continued through the woodland we encountered coal tit, wren, jackdaw and magpie, while a green woodpecker was heard calling nearby. From the viewing platform, mallard and mute swan were seen on the water, and a partially concealed grey heron was located at the edge of the water. Further along the path, a redwing perched obligingly at the top of a tree.

Fisher's Mill Pool

After crossing the Birmingham and Fazeley Canal at Fisher's Mill Bridge, we set up scopes to scan Fisher's Mill Pool. Tufted duck were the most numerous species, accompanied by several coots. Great crested grebe, goldeneye (both male and female), pochard, shoveler and Canada goose were also present. A little egret flew across the pool and continued overhead.

Viewing screen

Walking north, we stopped at the viewing screen overlooking West Scrape and Jubilee Wetlands South. Jubilee Wetlands South was quiet, but West Scrape held three little grebes and a small number of gadwall.

Towards the Lookout Hide

Continuing towards the Lookout Hide, we paused several times to scan Jubilee Wetlands North. Greylag goose, Egyptian goose, wigeon, teal, great white egret, cormorant, black-headed gull and lesser black-backed gull were all noted. A female stonechat showed well, perching on fence posts and reeds, and near the hide we watched a small party of long-tailed tits moving through the bushes.

The Lookout Hide

We stopped for lunch at the Lookout Hide overlooking North Pool. Water levels were high and bird numbers low, but a great white egret (possibly the same individual seen earlier) and a moorhen were present. Some members also had a brief view of a single goosander before it moved out of sight.

Towards the footbridge

Heading south, we paused to hear, and briefly see, a Cetti's warbler. A welcome rest at the benches overlooking East Scrape revealed large numbers of Canada goose, greylag goose and cormorant, along with a few pochard.

Dosthill Nature Reserve

After crossing the footbridge over the River Tame into Dosthill Nature Reserve, we walked north to a viewing screen. Here we enjoyed a lively scene, with hundreds of black-headed gulls, good numbers of wigeon and mallard, a few teal, tufted duck, gadwall and coot, plus single shoveler and great crested grebe.

Cliff Lakes and return

We retraced our steps for a brief visit to the north shore of Cliff Lakes, which was fairly quiet, holding only tufted duck, coot and lesser black-backed gull. On the return walk, a buzzard was spotted, our only raptor of the day. Back at the car park, several species were added to the day's list at the RSPB Welcome Hub.

Recent heavy rainfall meant water levels were high throughout the reserve, which explained the absence of waders. Nevertheless, it was an enjoyable day out in good company, with a varied selection of species and plenty to keep us interested.

Trip Count = 43 species

2025 SECOS Field Trips Total = 168
